A small estate agents from Colliers Wood is in the running for a major award.

Samuel Estates has been nominated in the Best Small Business category at the RBS South London Business Awards 2009.

It is one of three companies from Merton which have made it the finals, due to take place at an Oscars-style ceremony on May 20 at Selhurst Park, home of Crystal Palace FC.

The other finalists from the borough are corporate live event company Aztec UK in the Best Business for Sustainability category, and plastic manufacturers Plastico in the Best Business for International Trade category.

They were among 52 companies selected from entrants of the 12 boroughs south of the Thames in the annual competition – for which this paper is the media partner and also sponsors the customer service award.

Peter Pledger, chief executive of South London Business, said: "This terrific result emphasises not only the strength of local business in south London, but also the sheer innovation, diversity and entrepreneurial spirit to be found here."

Samuel Estates managing director Nick Samuel said: "Doing well at this particular time requires maximum commitment from every member of staff. These awards highlight the quality, care and effort we put into the work we do for customers and it is a great reward for sheer hard work."

The Windmill Way business will be joined at the finals by Plastico, a family-owned Mitcham company manufacturing disposable and reusable plastic tableware. Aztec UK, another Mitcham business which creates sound and light shows for conferences and corporate events and has been nominated for its commitment to going green.

Simon Thackray, managing partner of Thackray Williams LLP solicitors and judge of Best Medium Sized Business category said: "Recession there may be but all our finalists have demonstrated that by innovative thinking combined with effective management there are businesses in south London doing a lot more than simply surviving. Growth and increased profitability is still on the agenda for many."

Don't be taken in by commen

Commen with "hard luck stories" are at work in Wimbledon, the police have warned.

A spokesman for Wimbledon Village's safer neighbourhood team said: "Well-spoken, smartly dressed young men have been reported harassing residents into buying household goods with various hard luck stories.

"They are calling door to door purporting to be selling selling goods for a charity, the Organisation for Homeless and Unemployed People."

Police checks have revealed the organisation does not exist.

The spokesman said people who refused to buy the items were often subjected to verbal abuse by the commen.

The goods for sale include tea towels costing £7.99 and scrubbing brushes costing £2.

Anyone targeted should call Trading Standards on 020 8545 4018.
